Rively and four hands to their usual labor, there was a slide in what is known as Cemetery Cut, half mile west of this place, consisting of dirt and rock. When the train arrived at the cut Mr. R. put his hands to work to close the track and take every precaution should be taken, stationed himself and Captain Brent immediately over and over to the workmen, but just as they were finishing their work a second slide commenced from the underside of the bank, showing no evidence on top, and fell so quickly that eight of the men were caught, killing two—Powhatan Taylor and Edward Field—and wounding six, one seriously. No possible blame can be attached to the officers at work.
